NOTES

Corkage is $35 per 750mL bottle, 2 bottle maximum

CHAMPAGNE

A complex wine to make, it involves harvesting relatively under-ripe grapes, blending separate wines of different grape varieties, and long aging. But is it ever worth it! The best wines will have a lovely chalkiness.

BRUT

The classic, balanced, Champagne style. Made from a combination of white (chardonnay) and red (pinot meunier & pinot noir) grapes. Brut Champagne contains less than 12g of sugar per liter.

"Half dry". Here's a style of bubbly Champagne, which has the freshness, the chalky minerality of drier styles, but offers a little more rich sweetness to pair better with cheese & fruit desserts.

BOTTLES (750ML)

L. Aubry Fils 1er Cru Demi-Sec NV $73

SOUTHERN RHÔNE, FRANCE

The traditional sparkling wine is made from muscat, with some clairette blended in for freshness. It usually delivers a ripe peach/ apricot/ honeysuckle quality.

BOTTLES (750ML)

JURA, FRANCE

In the Southern Jura, a very fun wine is made under the Bugey appellation: a sparkling rosé from gamay & pousard, with 22-80G/L of residual sugar & low (7-8.5%) alcohol. The locals drink it with charcuterie.

BOTTLES (750ML)

Domaine de la Dentelle Bugey Cerdon NV $39

BURGUNDY, FRANCE

Like the 'serious' wines of Burgundy, we've got pinot noir & chardonnay making white & rosé sparkling wines labeled as Crémant de Bourgogne. They range from crisp to powerful to pleasantly fruity.

BOTTLES (750ML)

Parigot & Richard Crémant de Bourgogne Rosé NV $52

CANARY ISLANDS, SPAIN

On the easternmost Canary island, just 125km from Africa, there are some very interesting conditions indeed: vinyards covered in 3-5 meters of lava & ash, winds so strong each vine needs a protective wall & ultra low yields. This is made in the Champagne style, but using fresh malvasia instead of sugar for dosage.

ITALY

While Italy produces some truly majestic reds, the whites, when at their best, can be more than just a warm up. With hundreds of grape varieties and varying climates, expect some very interesting variation.

TRE VENEZIE

Collectively, the regions Friuli-Venezia Giulia, Trentino-Alto Adige & the Veneto are known as Tre Venezie. Most of Italy's most stylish, highest quality wines come from these regions.

SPAIN

Spain is known for a wide variety of wine styles: big reds, crisp Sherries, effervescent Cavas, but perhaps underrepresented in the dry white department. Whites are sprinkled throughout, in a variety of styles.

GALICIA

An old wine region doing new things, Galicia contains the better known Rias Baixas, and lesser known appellations such as Ribeira Sacra & Valdeorras. Old varieties like albariño & godello have gotten a modern touch.

THE LOIRE VALLEY

Along France's longest river, many styles of white wine are produced, mostly from 3 major grapes that share a very zesty acidity, and for sauvignon & chenin, these are the quality benchmarks for the world.

LOIRE CHENIN BLANC

It can be hard to sum up chenin blanc: It produces crisp, fresh wines, off dry wines, fully sweet unctuous nectars, and complex, long-age worthy wines to ponder. Such versatility in terrior expression!

NORTHERN RHÔNE

Perhaps a lot of ground lumped together, these are all perfumed, rich, wines, simultaneously fun & serious. As always in a warmer climate, ripeness is a mixed blessing, and we pick wines that retain freshness.

VIOGNIER

Exotic, rare, mysterious, intriguing, individual, delicious... all words to describe Condrieu, Château Grillet, and the few satellite viognier-based wines of the northern Rhône.

MARSANNE & ROUSSANNE

Roussanne blended with marsanne is common in the Northern Rhône: marsanne adds the fat, richness, oily textures and sweetness to the wines, while roussanne brings more acidity, elegance and aromatic complexities to the wine.

RHÔNE VALLEY, CORSICA & SOUTHERN FRANCE

SOUTHERN RHÔNE

Further south we find more white wine, but only a little compared to the reds. These wines tend to be very perfumed & floral, round & nutty, with a subtle freshness.

CORSICA

Not Italy and perhaps not even France, Corsica produces a large quantity of table wine, with only a little appellation wine. Whites in Ajaccio & Pattimonio are made from Vermentino and can be of high quality.

LANGUEDOC-ROUSSILLON

An area that produces plenty of quantity, but until recently, lower quality. Surprisingly, there are soils here so similar to those in the Côte d'Or, the terrior is often referred to as the "grand cru of the Midi".

ALIGOTÉ

The 'other' white grape from Burgundy is aligoté, and as prices have risen in the region, winemakers are focusing more on quality aligoté. It is known for high acidity, but can have complexities & great length in the right hands.

CÔTE D'OR

While red Burgundy is commonly known to be a cerebral wine, fickle to evolve & express itself, it's white counterpart is pure pleasure: elegant orchard fruit, racy acidity, lush mouthfeel & a long finish.

CÔTE DE NUITS

While the northern half of the Côte d'Or is mostly known for reds, the excellent whites have an intensity all their own..

CALIFORNIA

When white wine is concerned, California is often thought of a hot place, where ripeness is often achieved at the expense of acidity. However there are pockets around the state, as well as careful wine-makers in search of balance.

CHARDONNAY

Chardonnay from California is often considered the typical style, since the famous judgment in 1976. These are richer wines with toasty oak often supporting the opulence.

The holy grail; not only are these wines exceptionally exotic, complex, aromatic (and expensive, but justifiably so), but also rare. Tiny quantities are produced, so while they're long on the palette, the bottles are fleeting.

EASTERN FRANCE

The reds of the Jura (mostly pinot noir, but also tannic Trousseau & bright Poulsard) have been long overshadowed by the very special whites, but in the right hands, there is fun, earthy elegance here.

LOIRE VALLEY

While not common in the US, reds from the Loire, France's pastoral heart, are fixtures in Paris's casual restaurants. Usually earthy, sometimes berry fruited, but always delicious, exciting and food-friendly.

GROLLEAU

The dominant grape in the Loire is definitely cabernet franc, then pinot noir, then maybe gamay... Grolleau is there too, usually making rosé, but in the right hands a varietal wine can be fun and compelling!

SPAIN

The reds in Spain cover a wide range of styles: everyday wines are ripe with plenty of intensity, while Rioja tends to combine power & delicacy & Ribera del Duero adds more concentration without being overly tannic.

RIOJA & NAVARRA

Rioja is an old wine region with winemaking modeled after Bordeaux: long oak aging & a blend of different grapes, although today they may have a Burgundy-like delicacy while 100% tempranillo wines are becoming more common.

CASTILLA Y LEÓN

A large region, with multiple appellations within it, most notably Ribera Del Duero, which creates some of the finest red wines in the world from tinto fino, a variation of tempranillo. Other grapes in the region are tempranillo, tinta de toro, cabernet sauvignon, garnacha, merlot & mencia, found in Bierzo.

BOTRYTIS & LATE HARVEST

The common methods for producing sweet wines, especially white wines. Botrytis, or 'noble rot' is a disease which robs grapes from moisture, concentrating the sugar.

GERMANY

While most wine made in Germany is dry, they make a wide range of sweet wine, from a wide range of methods. Auslese: late harvest. Beerenauslese: botrytis. Eiswein: frozen grapes, concentrated juice. All styles have lively acidity & bright tropical fruit flavors.

Fortified wines are made by adding grape spirit to the fermenting grape juice while there's still sugar left. The process works with red & white wines, though red is more common.

ITALY

Passito is the Italian name for the process of making wine from air-dried grapes. Vin Santo is made from mostly white grapes, and tends to offer caramel & chamomile. In the case of Sagrantino, it is dried for 4 months before being fermented. Red & black berries, cocoa & medicinal herbs.
